Frederick Douglass in Ireland

A black and white engraving of Frederick Douglass, showing him from the chest up. He has dark, wavy hair and is wearing a dark, textured jacket over a white shirt and a dark cravat. He is looking slightly to the right of the viewer with a serious expression.

*'Instead of the bright blue sky of America, I am covered with the soft grey fog of the Emerald Isle.
I breathe, and lo!
the chattel becomes a man.'*

Frederick Douglass

Frederick Douglass, born into slavery, became a pivotal figure in its abolition. His drive for education, and his will to escape his bonds, led to an extraordinary life, seeing him serving as adviser to President Abraham Lincoln during the American Civil War.

During Reconstruction he became the highest-ranking Black official of his time and advocated for full civil rights for Black people as well as for women. He also lays claim to being the most photographed man of the nineteenth century!

Cork's Anti-Slavery Society dated back to 1826, and along with the very active Ladies branch, were a cross-denominational group, who brought in speakers, raised funds, and sent material aid to the Boston Anti-Slavery Bazaar.

Frederick Douglass, invited for such talks, arrived in Cork on the 10th October 1845. His stay was originally intended to span 10 days, but he enjoyed Cork so much it stretched to some 3 weeks. He gave 12 talks and lectures over this period, took a temperance vow from Father Mathew, and made good friends, particularly with the Lord Mayor Richard Dowden.

"And never shall I think of Cork—without—remembering that yourself and the kind Friends ... constituted the source from whence flowed much of the light, life and warmth of humanity which I found in that good city."

Letter to Richard Dowden, 11th November 1845

Much advertised in the press, Douglass' appearance at the Imperial Hotel on the 23rd of October 1845 was a huge success, with the speech he gave widely published and disseminated afterwards.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.
Our readers will perceive by our advertising columns, that this eloquent Anti-Slavery Advocate will deliver an Address to-morrow, at the Imperial Hotel. He is undoubtedly a man of genius—a man of high mental gifts—whose mental and physical powers are all harmoniously developed. All who would wish to see how the gifts of nature can triumph over the most disheartening circumstances, ought to avail themselves of the opportunity which to-morrow offers. FREDERICK DOUGLASS has published a Narrative of his Life, of which the American press, as will be seen by our Advertisement, speak in the strongest terms of commendation. It gives an insight into the workings of the Slave system in America, which cannot elsewhere be obtained in so concise and interesting a form; and should be in every one's possession—especially as the profits arising from its sale sustain Mr. DOUGLASS in his career of usefulness in these countries.

DOUGLASS IS APPOINTED U.S MARSHALL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (1877), AND LATER, RECORDER OF DEEDS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

HE TWICES REVISITS IRELAND AND BRITAIN, AND NEVER FORGETS HIS TIME HERE.

On 28th October 1845, in St Patrick's Hall, Cork, the words 'Céad Míle Fáilte to the Stranger' were 'posted in conspicuous areas of the room'. A large and lively crowd gathered to enjoy an evening of entertainment in Douglass' honour. As per usual, he spoke eloquently on the cause of the American slave, to cheers and shouts of approval.

Local Bard Daniel Casey wrote a song which was performed to the tune of 'Old Dan Tucker', and Douglass 'also sang a song in favour of abolition' to the same tune, 'to the infinite amusement of the company'.

TO FREDERICK DOUGLAS,
THE CELEBRATED FUGITIVE SLAVE.

Sung at the Soiree given to him, at St. Patrick's Hall, Monday, Oct. 25th, 1845.

AIR—"Old Dan Tucker."

STRANGER, from a distant nation
We welcome thee with acclamation,
And, as a brother, warmly greet thee,—
Rejoic'd in Erin's Isle to meet thee.

CHORUS,

Then "cead mille failte" to the stranger,
Free from bondage, chains, and danger.
"Cead mille failte" to the stranger,
Free from bondage, chains, and danger.

Who could have heard thy hapless story
Of tyrants—canting, base, and gory;
Whose heart throbb'd not with deep pulsation
For the trampled slaves' emancipation.

Then "cead mille failte," &c.

Oh! why should different hue or feature
Pervert the sacred laws of Nature,
And every tie of feeling sever,—
The voice of Nature thunders "Never!"

Then "cead mille failte," &c.

Then, borne o'er th' Atlantic waters,
The cry of Erin's sons and daughters
For freedom, shall henceforth be blended,
Till Slavery's hellish reign be ended.

Then "cead mille failte" to the stranger,
Free from bondage, chains, and danger.
"Cead mille failte" to the stranger,
Free from bondage, chains, and danger.

"Every true word spoken, every right aim levelled against slavery in this land will effect wonders in the destiny of the black slave in America"

Frederick Douglass,
'American Prejudice
Against Colour',

At Cork's Grande Dame

On the 23rd October 1845, The Imperial Hotel hosted a meeting in which the famous orator gave a speech called 'American Prejudice Against Colour'.

2012 Commemoration

OF FREDERICK DOUGLASS

A plaque commemorating the historic visit of Frederick Douglass was unveiled in The Imperial Hotel on August the 1st 2012.

Made of polished limestone, it is the work of Cork sculptor Matthew Thompson.
